Erzerum again. The Grand Duke, however, has doubtless a much more effective force than was hurled against the city more than 35 years ago.

PREPAREDNESS FOR TRADE PEACE A commercial crisis is more imminent than a war crisis in America, but the Democracy, divided on military preparedness, is a unit in opposition to the only adequate means of averting the disaster to our trade.

THE Democracy is divided on the issue of military preparedness. Its most influential leader in private life, the man who had and probably has the largest personal following of any individual Democrat, is opposed to any increase in the army or navy and he is preparing to fight any program looking toward strengthening the military forces.

But the warlike attack upon us, to resist which all far-seeing Americans are demanding that we be made ready, is distant. The commercial crisis that will follow the ending of the war is so near that there is no time to be lost in getting ready to avert it if disaster is to be avoided.

The Democracy, however, is practically a unit in opposition to the only course which can protect American industries. It finds itself without sufficient revenue to run the Government and it is planning to increase the internal taxes and to levy new ones which will burden business, instead of resorting to the revision of its own tariff law, a revision that could be made in such a way as both to raise revenue and protect industry.

Europe has been put to it in order to get money with which to pay for what it has been buying. At the close of the war it will exert itself to flood our markets with goods in order to pay by barter for what it must continue to buy.

Our own manufacturers will be confronted by a foreign competition fiercer than any that has been known in the history of trade. The Germans know how to compete. Their iron manufacturers in order to enlarge their markets have been in the habit of selling in South America, the Orient and in England for from 103 to 119 marks for iron for which they charged 120 marks at home; and in order to get into the Italian markets they have at times cut the price to 75 marks.

The same kind of efficiency that has enabled Germany to hold her own against the great Powers of Europe for eighteen months will be applied to rehabilitating German trade when the peace treaty is signed. The other Powers will be efficient in their peculiar ways for the same purpose.

To ignore the evident warnings of the present and declare that our tariff law must not be changed because under normal conditions it would have raised sufficient revenue is the height of folly. Conditions are not normal. The law might have been the best when it was passed and yet need revision today.

Conditions demand the best skill of the ablest commercial statesmen. We must continue to buy from Europe in order to enable Europe to pay for what she is to buy from us. But our tariff law must be framed for the purpose of protecting our producers from ruinous competition and for the purpose of opening favorable markets for our goods in competing countries.

The Democracy is proving more conclusively every day that it is incapable of dealing with the pressing commercial problems confronting us. Its leaders are busy preparing to defend their past actions instead of drafting laws intended to ward off imminent perils, and are proving once more that the task of governing the country is too big for it, just as the duties of the State Department were beyond the abilities of Mr. Bryan.

SAD STATE OF THE NAVY BETWEEN disgraceful alternatives the Senate chose the less in publishing the report of Admiral Fletcher on the condition of our navy. This belated publicity was compelled by publication, a day earlier, of an accurate summary in the newspapers. It should never have been withheld. The conditions disclosed are almost a justification for anti-preparedness, for certainly if we cannot keep in fighting trim the small navy we have, it would be folly to enlarge. In fact, it would be suicidal, for with a small navy the country is not so apt to rely upon it. It is bad enough that there exists a lack of men, but men can be won in time of war. What is infinitely worse is that there are not enough officers and that a long process of education and experience, which cannot be improvised, is necessary before our navy can be practically efficient.

Tom Daly's Column

WERE glad we beat our friend, the Firman, to it. Our reply to his first verse was printed on Wednesday, and this, mailed before he saw them, came to us yesterday morning.

Dear Sir—Or perhaps I should hail you as a friend, For oft to my heart great joy you did send; I'll confess that great pleasure is always mine when I muse o'er the fine thoughts that flow from your pen.

But I wish to apologize for my intrusion, For I think that I labored beneath a delusion. In taking for granted that your invitation Was for all, irrespective of their rank or station.

When I think of it now I am free to observe I must have been filled with a wonderful nerve; Knowing nothing excepting how cool should be burned, To try and mix in among the cultured and learned.

But enough! I can hear you saying right now, "What's the matter with this fellow, anyhow?" So not wishing to tempt you to do aught unkindly, I will tease you no more, and remain, yours truly, A. Firman.

Etiquette in the School

Sir: If you have any influence with the moss-back who runs that correspondence school, lend him your "Bill's Manual" first turning down the corner of page 168. He might then happen to read this little essay following the chapter devoted to "Etiquette in the School."

"The teacher that raises hell and is yet kind is beloved by his pupils. The hotel proprietor, by affability and accommodating spirit, may fill his hotel with guests. The railway conductor, who has a pleasant word for the lonely traveler, is always remembered with favor. The postoffice clerk, who very carefully looks through a pile of letters and says, 'Not any very gently, please, adding a word of hope, by saying, 'It may come on the afternoon train,' we always gratefully recollect. When the time comes that we are kind to him, we always take great pleasure in doing so."

A lot of us are playing hooky from that correspondence school because teacher is too sorry. Poets.

Sir—in the pines of Southern Jersey, near Vincentown, Jane Lemon became the wife of Ebenezer Sweet, which induces me to sing:

"The strange how well extremes do meet, In Jane and Ebenezer, I'm sure. She is no longer sour but Sweet, And he's a Lemon squeezer."

This is part of a letter of appreciation received by a cookery expert:

"Your recipe for sunshine Cake listens good to us and we have decided to try one out along your lines and if it is a Success we will buy at the Store the ingredients as you suggest but we will not by them till we are Sure."

IN FARMER SMITH'S department yesterday young Alfred Palmer, of Clymer street, presented this quatrain:

If you would see kindness, Faith and hope and love, Read the Evening Ledger, John is the Rainbow Cloud.

If Alfred had only been conversant with the tricks of the trade he would have made a better rhyme by dropping into negro dialect, thus:

If you would see kindness, Faith an' hope an' love, Read de EVENING LEDGER, John de Rainbow Cloud.

WERE old foghorns, of course, so our opinion doesn't greatly matter, but we could help feeling that the Cosmopolitan Magazine's blurb of a forthcoming serial might be improved by capitals in spots:

(It the novel) is highly entertaining, and, at the same time, stimulates deep and sober thought. A clever grip of what the British term "the lower middle class" becomes dispirited with her surroundings and determines to rise above them, to become a cultivated woman of the world. Her first step is startling and absolutely to be condemned as either a realist or a dreamer, yet, as conditions EXALTING in the sphere to which she aspires are revealed, I'm indefinable action is humanly understandable. Katherine Bush, whose life is faithfully portrayed in the pages of this unusual serial—

we know right off what our duty is, We are spurred not to read the tale at all.

THE New York Evening Mail's account of the death of Miss D. K. Ranous says: "She edited and translated the complete works of Guy de Maupassant, Gustave Flaubert and Benjamin Disraeli. She also edited the History of Literature, in 16 volumes." G. D., who calls our attention to it, remarks: "Henry James needs to be translated into English, but I did not know that Disraeli wrote in a foreign tongue."

Sure Enough! Burnt Oyster Crackers "Last Friday," writes F. P. D. from Gonzaga College, Washington, "our Italian cook was asked: 'Have you any oyster crackers for dinner?' 'Oh, yes!' he said, 'I gotta two greata bigga blacka wans. Dey gona com' at 11 o'clock!'"

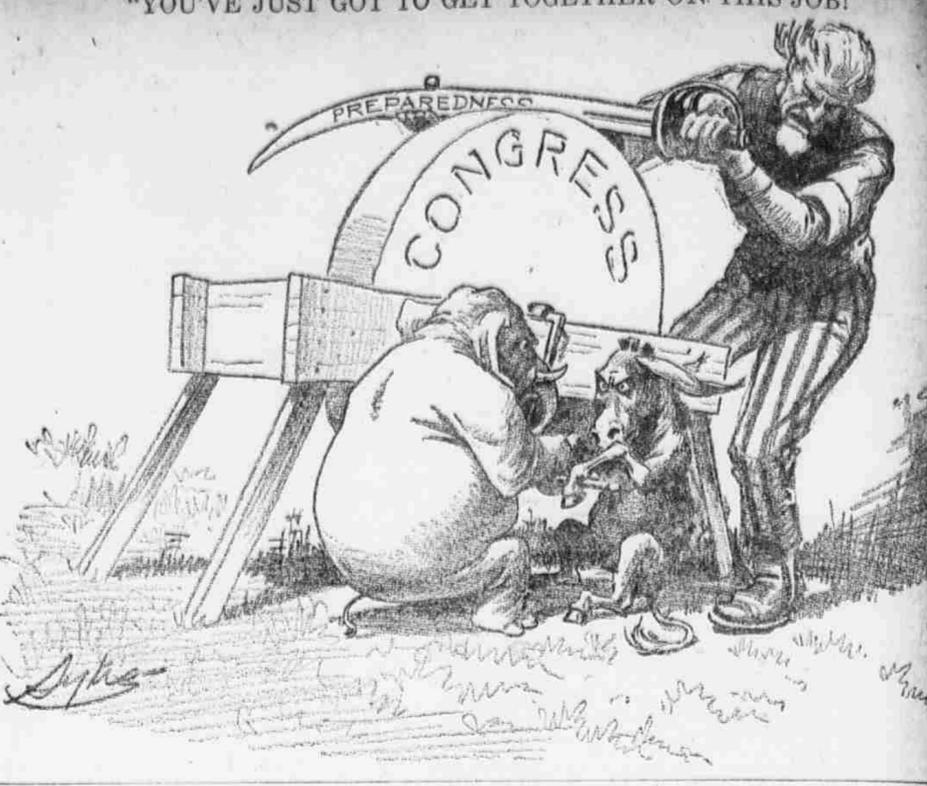

Sir—Here's a very sloppy, slanted sign in a small restaurant near the University of Pennsylvania:

SOUP SANDWICHES "Yours."

H. S.'S POLITICAL EDITORIAL (Continued and Concluded.)

And, as we were saying, shooting the bovine is the politician's chief stock in trade. Of course, it requires skill to be successful in politics, and nerve is another requisite, but no nerves. But the greatest of the trinity of necessities is alive, for while he may possess the nerve of a yegman and have Strawberry Jim and Brother Bill backed into the back channel at League Island as witnesses, he loses if he lacks the gentle art of chucking the bull.

He must sense the moment that the defrauded freemen are in a mood to be told in tones of righteous indignation how they are being trimmed by the rascals and hulk window books. If he wins they will get good places in the bread line, he says. And, Tommie, this "be-as-ah-shart, Pan-statemans" thing is a new line of bull to get the bread line to shape. For knowing how to manage the bread line and get the boys a little of yesterday's is very essential to the success of a "statemans." Got it?

WHISKERS HELP MAKE PRESIDENTS

Or Is It Their Absence?—The Coming Campaign Will Tell—Effect of Beards and Mustaches on Political Fortunes

TO formulate a philosophy of whiskers is a task remaining for some future Plato, or Kant, John Stuart Mill or Teufelsdröckh. The subject might be treated as a branch of utilitarianism or of esthetics, but to omit the field of politics would be to neglect an important line of inquiry.

In our Congress of the United States there are several well-known crops or patches of whiskers. "Cyclone" Davis has won the sweet rewards of publicity by his many-footed length and by his garb.

But not the least of his distinctions is his beard, which to be appreciated must be seen. The "strawberry whiskers" of "Ham" Lewis are part and parcel of his elegant habiliments. They have borne no small part in the political career of the Senator from Illinois.

Which leads us to reflect on the effect of whiskers on the political fortunes of the wearer. By "whiskers" we mean, and we follow the authority of Robinson Crusoe, not merely beards but mustaches. You remember Crusoe's great pair of "Turkish whiskers."

In the early days of our republic the styles of hair dressing encroached somewhat on the facial territory anterior to the auricles. In the case of John Adams the ears were entirely concealed, though the top of his head was nude. But this consideration does not prevent a classification of Presidents according to whiskers. We find, then, that the following chief executives were clean shaven: Washington, John Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Andrew Jackson, William Henry Harrison, Tyler, Polk, Taylor, Fillmore, Pierce, Buchanan, Lincoln (when elected), Johnson, McKinley, Wilson. That is 17 out of 27. The following wore mustaches, without other adornments: Cleveland, Roosevelt, Taft—only three and all of them recent incumbents. The first full-bearded President was Grant, followed by Hayes, Garfield and Benjamin Harrison. Burnside gentlemen and such are no longer on the available list of presidential timber. Since 1889 our Presidents have all been chosen from the clean shaven and the mustached. Of course, times may change, and the full beard may return. Let us look over the list of candidates and possibilities for the 1916 campaign.

Doping Out the Campaign The result of the survey is as follows: Clean-shaven—Wilson, Governor Willis, Senator Harding, Herbert S. Hadley, Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman, Senator La Follette, Senator William Alden Smith and Senator Borah. Mustached—T. R. Roosevelt, Senator Norris, Senator Cummins, Senator Root, Senator Weeks, Myron T. Herrick and Theodore E. Burton. Full-bearded—Justice Hughes and Congressman Mann. Mr. Fairbanks is in a class by himself with a bushy mustache and a bushy tuft on his chin which only a barber could name. If you can't figure out the chances of each of these men from the foregoing data, you are utterly worthless as a political prophet.

Of course there are other methods of doping out the result, as, for instance, the number of names a candidate has. Twenty Presidents from George Washington to Woodrow Wilson have had but two names apiece, or having had three, dropped one. This method, to say the least, is valid to the same extent as the whisker test.

Beards have figured in history. After Sir Francis Drake entered the harbor of Cadiz, April 19, 1587, and destroyed shipping to the amount of 10,000 tons lading, he had to use his own expressive phrase, "singed the Spanish King's beard." A bold heathen desperately shaved the beards of King D.vid's Ambassadors. Their King mercifully covered their shame, saying, "Tarry ye at Jericho until your beards be grown," but answered the insult. In Greece the beard was universally worn until the time of Alexander, who ordered his soldiers to shave in order that their beards might not be seized by their enemies.

When Beards Were Taxed Adam was by tradition created with a beard, and the ancient heroes, Abraham and Agamemnon, Woden, King Arthur and Charlemagne, are all bearded in our pictures. According to Pliny, Scipio Africanus was the first Roman to shave every day; but from the time of Hadrian to that of Constantine the practice was rare among Romans. According to Tacitus, the ancient Germans regarded a clean-shaven face as a badge of servitude, and the Lombards received their name from their long beards. In later times taxes were imposed on beards.

NEW TYPE OF FACTORY BUILDINGS

To the Editor of Evening Ledger: Sir—Why do factory buildings have to be unsightly? They don't in Plymouth, Mass. There's a cordage factory that doesn't look like it. In Cleveland a water tank is enclosed in a tower that adds greatly to the appearance of the building, and in Ohio the premises of a manufacturing plant look like a university campus, buildings and all. Evidently there's a place for the esthetic in factory architecture. P. H. KENDALL Philadelphia, January 18.
